

CAN ANYONE TEACH US THE HEBREW NAMES FOR THE OWL?

- The Bible contains at least 11 names of owls—but we'll only take time to mention a half-dozen of them.
- The tinshemet (תנשמת), ka'at (פוס), kos (פוס), yanshuf (שלף), shalakh (שלף), and bat ya'anah (בת היענה).
- They are are all mentioned in the lists of birds in the Bible that aren't kosher—which we'll come back to in a minute.
- The tinshemet is the barn screech owl.
- The ka'at Hebrew name denotes vomiting (meki), an apparent reference to the fact that, as do other owls, it regurgitates the bones of its prey.
- The kos is probably the little owl without "ears," that is, no crest of feathers.
- The yanshuf or "great owl" inhabited devastated Edom and has been identified as the long-eared owl.
- The shalakh, according to the Talmud, "catches fish out of the sea" and has been identified with the fish owl (Ketupa zeylonensis), the only owl in Israel that feeds on fish, found near Lake Kinneret.
- The bat ya'anah has been identified with one of the species of owl that utters a cry when calling to one other.
- The tannim lives in the desert and in ruins and emits a sighing cry, the name tannim being derived from tanah (meaning "to weep").
- The o'ah has been identified with the Palestinian eagle owl. It's the largest of the owls, found in the Jordan Valley, and feeds on hares and rats, reptiles and birds.
- The kippod has been identified as the short-eared owl.
- The lilit, sometimes called a "night monster," or "screech owl," refers nocturnal bird, perhaps the tawny owl.
- The sa'ir is apparently the smallest of the owls.

HAVE YOU EVER HEARD THE SOUND OF AN OWL AT NIGHT?

- What did it sound like?
- You remember that the Hebrew name for one of the owls is "Bat haYa'anah," which means "the daughter of one that answers"—because when they hoot, they answer one another.

- Do you know why you've probably never heard an owl during the day? (That's when most owls sleep.)
- Can you think of anything that might be special about an animal that hunts mostly at night?
- As with most birds of prey, they have very good eyesight.
- But owls, because they hunt at night, also have very good hearing.

IT'S TIME FOR THE OWL QUIZ!

- What valuable service do owls perform? (They destroy rodents that invade field crops and stored foods.)
- How many different kinds of owls are there in the world today? (There are 167 species of typical owls and 14 species of barn owls.)
- How many degrees can an owl turn its head? (270)
- Why does an owl need to turn its head in such a wide arc? (Because owls cannot move their eyes in their sockets, so they have to turn their heads.)
- What's the one place on earth where owls can not be found? (The Antarctic region.)
- Are owls herbivores, eating only vegetation; carnivores, eating only other animals; or omnivores, eating both vegetation and other animals? (Carnivores.)
- How small are the smallest owls and how large are the largest owls? (The smallest is the elf owl, which measures about six inches long; the largest is the great gray owl, which measures about 30 inches long and has a wing span of 54 to 60 inches.)

CAN ANYONE TEACH US IF THE OWL IS KOSHER?

- Are birds ever kosher?
- What about birds of prey?
- What is a "bird of prey"?
- Can anyone imagine why the Torah would teach us not to eat birds that hunt other animals for their food?

IN ANCIENT TIMES OWLS WERE THOUGHT OF AS A SIGN THAT BAD THINGS WERE GOING TO HAPPEN.

- Although people thought that dreaming of birds generally was a good sign, certain kinds of owls were thought to be a bad sign. (Ber. 57b).
- Why do you think they may have felt that way about owls? (Most owls make a hooting sound like a groan, and because they inhabit ruins, they sound like they're mourning over the devastation—and so in the Bible they are connected with destruction and desolation.)
- They often live in desolated places and ruins, or tree holes—who do you think made the holes?

- In fact, the Arabs call the owl "mother of ruins" because of where some of them live.
- Have you ever seen an owl and, if so, where was it?
- What do you think and feel about owls?
- Should owls be protected from hunters and other human predators and, if so, why?
